Commanding Officer,

First Regiment, Canadian Grenadier Guards.

CANADIAN GRENADEIER GUARDS OVERSEAS BATTALION

THE Canadian Grenadier Guards, Overseas Battalion, whose official number among the infantry units of Canada's Overseas Force is Eighty-seven, was organized to represent in concrete form on active service, the traditions and the spirit of the senior Militia Regiment of Canada and oldest volunteer Regiment in the British Empire, the First Regiment; Canadian Grenadier Guards.

From the hour the news reached Montreal that a state of war existed between Great Britain and Germany, the First Regiment had bent all its efforts to the discharge of the new and heavy responsibilities which had so suddenly been thrust on it in common with all units of the Active Militia. It had given freely of its officers and men; it had taken its full share of the onerous duties of patrolling and protecting the great rail and water routes which centre at Montreal; it had maintained its own strength by training officers and men to replace and to follow those who had gone on active service. The organization of the Overseas Battalion, the Canadian Grenadier Guards, was the logical culmination of these earlier activities.

The First Regiment, Canadian Grenadier Guards, traces its history through the First Regiment Prince of Wales Fusiliers, to the First Prince of Wales Regiment, a rifle regiment, and the Sixth Battalion Fusiliers. Through the first of these it derives its title as the oldest volunteer Regiment in the British Empire, the Prince of Wales Regiment having been organized as a battalion in 1859. Both the First Regiment and the Sixth Fusiliers were on active service during the Fenian Raids of 1866 and 1870, and the First Regiment was next for duty in Montreal at the time of the Northwest Rebellion in 1885, being encamped under arms for a month ready to go to the front. When the first South African contingent was formed, the First Regiment contributed its full quota of officers and men.

In 1898, the First Battalion, Prince of Wales Regiment, and the Sixth Battalion Fusiliers were amalgamated into one regiment of the Active Militia as the First Battalion Prince of Wales Fusiliers. In 1911, Major General Carson, then a Lieutenant-Colonel, was approached by the Militia authorities and asked if he would undertake the reorganization of the First Regiment. This he agreed to do on condition that he was given a free hand in the selection of his officers; that the Regiment should be renamed and made a Regiment of Foot Guards while still preserving its identity as the First Regiment of the Active Militia of Canada; and that it should be provided with an armoury of its own. The first two officers whom General Carson asked to co-operate with him in building up a new and stronger battalion on the historic foundations of the old First Regiment were Colonel F. G. Meighen and Lieut.-Col. W. O. H. Dadds, both of whom had been for years actively associated with militia work. The reorganization was officially promulgated in Militia Orders of January, 1912. In April, 1914, the Regiment took possession of its new and beautiful armoury on Esplanade Avenue facing Mount Royal Park.

The outbreak of hostilities in August, 1914, found the Regiment prepared and ready to turn its hand from the parades and drills of peace to the grim realities of war. The night that news of the declaration of war reached Montreal, the Guards were at drill in their armoury and a detachment of officers and men marched direct from their parade to active guard duty on the canals and water front. Within a week, recruiting had begun for the "Royal Montreal Regiment," the Fourteenth Overseas Battalion, with Colonel Meighen in command and eleven other officers and 337 non-commissioned officers and men from the First Regiment in the ranks. Major Dodds helped to recruit the Regiment and then went forward with the Field Artillery. The fighting around Festubert and St. Julien, in which the Royal Montreal Regiment played so glorious a part, took heavy toll of the officers and men. Among the killed were Major Warmington, Captains Steacie, Williamson and Brotherhood. Major Hanson, Captain and Quartermaster Smith, Captain Knubley and Lieutenant English were wounded.

Scarcely had the Fourteenth Battalion sailed before the call came for more officers and men to join the Twenty-third Battalion, under Lt.-Col. F. W. Fisher; to this unit, the Guards supplied two Captains, four Lieutenants, and 269 non-commissioned officers and men. In May, 1915, the Sixtieth Battalion was authorized and raised, the Guards furnishing its allotted quota of six officers and 225 men. The First Regiment has had representation as well among the officers and men of the Twenty-fourth and Seventy-third Infantry Battalions, and the various other units raised in Montreal for overseas service.

The organization of a "special" overseas battalion, from and by the First Regiment was frequently and earnestly discussed during the months following the departure of the Royal Montreal Regiment. During this time, the Home Regiment was giving its full share of officers and men to the various units raised for overseas service; it was, nevertheless, the strong desire of both officers and men to furnish a battalion which should, to a greater degree, be representative of the First Regiment, as the senior battalion of the Canadian Militia.

This hope took definite form on the return of Colonel Meighen to Montreal in June, 1915, and when, early in September, he was able to announce to the officers that the Militia Department had authorized him to raise another overseas battalion to be known as the Canadian Grenadier Guards, the response was immediate and enthusiastic.

A class for the preliminary training of non-commissioned officers was opened on September 20th at the Armoury of the First Regiment, which was the headquarters of the Overseas Battalion until the unit was moved to its winter quarters, and a noticeably large number of its members were drawn from the ranks of the home regiment. Active recruiting began on October 23rd and in seven weeks the Battalion was raised and ready for its winter training in barracks at St. Johns.

Something over fifty per cent of the men of the Regiment were recruited in Montreal, but every Province of Canada has its representation in the Battalion. Some two hundred recruits were secured in the Eastern Townships; a considerable number came from Ottawa Valley; Dundas County furnished its contingent, while groups from Cobalt, Haileybury, the "Porcupine Country," Gaspé, and even far-off Alberta, made the Battalion a thoroughly representative "Canadian" unit.
